Information/News

Launch of a New Network: INTEGRATE - International Network of Generational Transfers Research

Topics: A new network aims to bring together international researchers who are interested in the transfer of wealth and poverty between generations. The network is sponsored by the UK ESRC (Economic and Social Research Council) for two years (2012-2014), and is open to experts in academia, government, media, business and other stakeholder organisations. It is also global in nature, and interested in issues that affect those located in the developed and developing parts of the world. INTEGRATE believes that the growing population imbalance as societies age, will compound existing inequalities. The impact on transmissions of wealth and poverty between generations could be one of the key challenges of the 21st Century. For some it is about debates of intergenerational conflict for others the issue is inter-dependency and survival across all generations. INTEGRATE will look at ways to explore and develop research on exchanges of wealth and transmissions of poverty, and the extent to which cultural and social norms, policies and regulation, economic and demographic change enhance or inhibit motivations for gifting, the benefits of receiving and the consequences of experiencing neither.

The Undivided Past. Humanity Beyond Our Differences

Edited by: David Cannadine

Published by: Knopf

Pages: 352

ISBN: 978-0-307-26907-2

Publication date: April 2013

Topics: From one of our most acclaimed historians, a wise and provocative call to re-examine the way we look at the past: not merely as the story of incessant conflict between groups but also of human solidarity throughout the ages. Investigating the six most salient categories of human identity, difference, and confrontation—religion, nation, class, gender, race, and civilization—David Cannadine questions just how determinative each of them has really been. For while each has motivated people dramatically at particular moments, they have rarely been as pervasive, as divisive, or as important as is suggested by such simplified polarities as “us versus them,” “black versus white,” or “the clash of civilizations.” For most of recorded time, these identities have been more fluid and these differences less unbridgeable than political leaders, media commentators—and some historians—would have us believe. Throughout history, in fact, fruitful conversations have continually taken place across these allegedly impermeable boundaries of identity: the world, as Cannadine shows, has never been simply and starkly divided between any two adversarial solidarities but always an interplay of overlapping constituencies. With wide-ranging erudition, David Cannadine compellingly argues against the pervasive and pernicious idea that conflict is the inevitable state of human affairs. The Undivided Past is an urgently needed work of history, one that is also about the present—and the future.

Call for research proposals under the FP7 EU project “Data without Boundaries” (DwB): Support for transnational access to official microdata

Topics: To enhance access across borders to official microdata, the FP7-funded Data without Boundaries project offers different kinds of support for the work with highly-detailed data from a number of European countries. Depending upon the Research Data Centre, available datasets are business data and household surveys considered to be too detailed, confidential or sensitive to be provided through standard access mechanisms.

Deadline: This is a continuous call and there will be additional opportunities to apply. The next upcoming deadline is 15th May 2013. Additional deadline dates are 15th October in 2013 and 15th April and 15th October in 2014.

The Crisis of Political Trust in Post-Communist Democracies

Date: May 30 -June 1, 2013

Site: Cluj-Napoca, Romania

Organiser: Center for the Study of Democracy at Babeş-Bolyai University Cluj, Romania, Department of Political Science

Topics: Conference participants will explore this crisis of trust in democratic institutions and leadership, what we will refer to as political trust. We are calling for papers from a broad range of theoretical and empirical perspectives that can address the following: To what extent is political trust a measure of the quality of democratic governance? How necessary is political trust to democratic representation? What is the interplay among individual, mezzo, and macro-level factors that explain the level of political trust? How malleable is political trust, and what factors are associated with its variance? What role do political parties and political party systems play in shaping political trust? To what extent is political trust a media-derived or media-driven phenomenon? What is the relationship between political trust and other broad theoretical constructs such as social capital? What is the relationship between political trust and other forms of trust, such as generalized trust, particularized trust, strategic trust, and trust in one's own capabilities (internal efficacy)? Guest speaker: Prof. Paul Sum, University of North Dakota.

SASA congress: "Doing Sociology from the Periphery: Place, Power and Knowledge"

Date: June 30-July 3, 2013

Site: Tshwane, South Africa

Organiser: The South African Sociological Association

Topics: Questions that will be on the table at the 19th Annual Congress of SASA are: How, in general, do we react to the presence of modernity outside of Europe? Are there ways of being modern that are not essentially European? Can we get away from the criticism that the grand narrative of modernity is intrinsically Eurocentric? Should we rather talk of the existence of multiple modernities in the world? And how do we react when we apply the traditional sociological values of inclusivity and universalism to the discipline itself and find that its can consists largely of Western scholars? To what extent do the classical concerns of Sociology reflect the false universalisation of the particularistic experience of Western scholars? How do we promote a dialogue in which the voices of both the powerful and the powerless in the discipline are heard? Should we dump the totalising and universalising urges of Sociology and celebrate the fragment and the particular?

Relational Sociology: Reconstructing Networks with Meaning

Date: May 27, 2013

Site: Berlin, Germany

Organiser: Berlin Graduate School of Social Sciences (BGSS)

Topics: The theoretical concepts and the methods applied in relational sociology with three leading scholars in the field: Ronald Breiger, University of Arizona; John Mohr, University of California at Santa Barbara and John Padgett, University of Chicago will be discussed in the workshop. In particular, the organisers discuss methods that relate properties of social networks to other social stuff, including events, practices, roles, institutions, and organisational invention and innovation. Examples are blockmodel analysis, Galois lattices, correspondence analysis, and other statistical analyses of relational data. On the conceptual side, we are led to questions like: What are social networks really? Can culture be studied as a network? How are culture and networks related to one another? How do events lead to networks, and vice versa? How do reproduction and change come about? And most importantly: There may be networks in my field of study – what do I do about that?

UCSIA Summer School Religion, Culture and Society

Date: August 25 - September 1, 2013

Site: Antwerp, Belgium

Organiser: Universitair Centrum Sint-Ignatius Antwerpen

Topics: The UCSIA Summer School brings together a multidisciplinary and international group of 30 PhD students and postdoctoral scholars. It is the aim of the summer course is to give these young scholars the content, methodologies, disciplinary perspectives etc. necessary for conducting their research and to support them in the development of their future academic career. The programme offers them the opportunity to attend classes taught by established researchers, to present their own work and discuss their ideas in a relaxed and open atmosphere and within a multidisciplinary framework. The organisers will research these processes of change that arise in the interaction between religions and societies in contexts of plurality - especially also in a global world -, where a diversity of religions and societal perspectives are present, identity-claims are problematised, and the understanding of citizenship is evolving. What role can religions play in shaping such societies? How do plural societies affect religions towards changing their own attitudes towards one another and revising their role in society? How do religious convictions and perspectives on citizenship relate to one another? Can one "belong" to various cultures and religions? These challenges can be studied in various areas: changes in the perception and self-image of religions and faith-based organisations (so-called "identity-issues"), education, public health management, welfare programs, the relevance of voluntary work, attitudes towards (im)migration, gender and race issues, culture, politics, involvement in the public sphere, etc.

Fifth International Social Science Summer School: "Challenging the Social Order: Revolution, Reform and Transformation Under and After Socialism"

Date: July 2-9, 2013

Site: Mykolaiv, Ukraine

Organiser: Petro Mohyla Black Sea State University

Topics: The Fifth International Social Science Summer School in Ukraine welcomes proposals from the disciplines of history, sociology, anthropology, political science, economics, and adjacent fields. While the primary focus will be on the socialist and post-socialist era (in the former Soviet Union, Central, Eastern and Southern Europe), pre-Soviet history may also be examined. The Summer School is designed to be interdisciplinary and international and follows the format of a Workshop. Each participant will have the opportunity to present a paper and receive comments from a group of international scholars, as well as from the other participants, who are expected to be active in these discussions. Topics under consideration include: The causes and dynamics of revolution, reform and transformation; mobilisation, protest and rebellion; The management of social or political crisis; The production of new norms (informal, legal, economic, political); The impact of dominant economic models; The management of the past: transitional justice, lustration, the politics of memory; How individuals and groups adapt to a new social order: career paths, survival strategies. The Summer School is open to PhD students (or students enrolled in a kandidat nauk program) and young researchers (up to six years removed from their PhD or kandidat nauk degree). Proposals strong on theory and empirical research are particularly welcomed.

Studia paedagogica: "Out of the mainstream"

Place of publication: Brno, Czech Republic

Type of publication: online; ISSN 1803-7437

Publication date: 2014

Published by/ edited by: Department of Educational Sciences, Faculty of Arts, Masaryk University

Topics: The topic of Out of the mainstream has three levels. The first level stems from the quantitative point of view which is statistically defined. The questions here are: Who are those who are too few? How many immigrants, unemployed and ill citizens are there? What is considered to be alternative, exceptional or unique and why? How are normally described and interpreted phenomena which do not meet the norms of intensity and frequency? Which methodological approaches are typically employed to research out of the mainstream people, groups and communities? Which peoples and groups are researched too often or too rarely? Who lives in the ghettos? The second level is related to understanding of social norms as of rules that individuals need to heed and respect or whose abiding is expected by the society. Consequently, the following questions are interesting: What does an individual or a group need to do to break a norm and what do other people do to make these individuals or groups be out of the mainstream? How do youth subcultures form and how do they influence their surroundings? How do sects and religious groups come into being? How does education take place in families with different and alternative lifestyles? How are long-term ill children educated? Who is excluded and what for? On the other hand, who stays in the mainstream and why? Who is IN and who is OUT? What brought women to the army and what made male teachers stay in education despite being rank and file teachers? What leads individuals, groups and communities to want to stay out of the mainstream? Are those who educate out of the mainstream people also out of the mainstream? How is it possible that some achieve only elementary education? Why do pupils break school rules? The third level is about the tension between the existence of norms and their breaking. The questions are: How do proponents of alternative norms see their peers, parents and teachers? Which new elements can the concepts of lifelong learning and counselling bring to the definition of being out of the mainstream? Which type of help is appreciated by out of the mainstream people? Which strategies do out of the mainstream people choose in order to integrate into the mainstream or to stay out of it?

Special Issue: Is there a Specificity of the Southeastern European (Neo-)Populism(s)? (Brill)

Editor: Sergiu Mişcoiu, PhD habilitated Senior Lecturer, Babes-Bolyai Univ., Cluj-Napoca, Romania

Topics: In this special issue of Southeastern Europe, authors will try to identify the specificity of Southeastern European Neo-Populism by answering to series of questions such as: How can one define Populism and determine the differences between Populism and Neo-Populism?; Is Southeastern Europe a more suitable framework for the development of Neo-Populism (like Latin America was for Populism in the 1960s?); What are the main peculiarities of this region's Populism?; Is there, in fact, a rather unitary phenomenon in Central, Eastern and Southeastern Europe or do we deal with a series of divergent phenomena?; How are Southeastern European (Neo-)Populism(s) connected to their Western European, Latin American, Eastern Asian or Western African counter-parts? Copy-paste or redrawing?; What are the main connections between regional Populism and Nationalism, Nationalist and Internationalist Communism, Fascism, Anti-Semitism, Orthodoxism, "Autarchism" and other "-isms" abundantly present in the region?

Deadline: May 15, 2013; The articles should be submitted according to the requirements presented on the journal's web page: http://www.brill.nl/files/brill.nl/specific/authors_instructions/SEEU.pdf

Book: "Alternative Approaches to Human Security: Conflicts between Global and Local Governance"

Publication date: 2014

Published by/ edited by: Françoise Companjen and Abel Polese

Topics: The principal goal of this book is to re-chart the relationship between the individual, the state and governance mechanisms taking the southern Caucasus as its empirical focus. The first section will be devoted to blatant failures to include people in governance and human security. Exclusion from some processes and the incapacity of the state to reckon with all the possibilities combined with the different layers in a society generates cases in which, despite an official accent on human security, the individual is as insecure as ever. The second part of the book will explore cases in which human security has been secured, made possible either because of appropriate action by the state or because a local community has succeeded in creating a management mechanism elastic enough to deal with different cases of lives in a particular, which has enabled liberation from uniformisation (basically one remote region was exempted from having to comply with what was done in a different region far away simply to acquiesce in the same rule but communities were given choice and leeway to manoeuvre). Perspective authors are invited to propose a contribution starting from one of the above mentioned areas, if possible based on an empirical case study: "security of whom", "security from what" and "security by what means".

Deadline: April 15, 2013; (Abstract: 300 words plus short biography)

Grants/Jobs/Internships

Ethnic and Minority Studies Master Program

Institution/Organiser: ELTE-UNESCO Minority Studies DEPARTMENT, Faculty of Social Sciences, Eötvös Loránd University (ELTE)

Kind of support/work: Master Program

Duration: Two years/ four semesters

Site: Budapest, Hungary

Topics: The Ethnic and Minority Studies Master Program dealing with minority issues and ethnic diversity in the region of Eastern and Central Europe with regard to the integration process of the countries of the region into the international community of the European Union. The program offers a systematic study of inter-ethnic relations, minority problems and processes in post-communist societies within a comparative perspective; provides background in major trends in economy, politics, society, social policy, social geography, and social psychology of the countries in the region; Introduce students to basic skills which are necessary not only to understand but to intervene in inter-group conflicts likely to occur in ethnic communities, urban neighbourhoods, industrial workplaces, political organizations, trade unions, mass media, etc. In the curricula of the program theory, research experiences, applied knowledge and intervention skills are joined together to provide a unique interdisciplinary academic opportunity and a "training-ground" for future minority policy experts. As a benefit of expected international participation, the program creates an international community of students who speak English and come mainly from countries where problems of ethnic and minority relations are rampant. Consequently various viewpoints can evolve and therefore a specific balance of the student body is promoted. Extra-curricular activities have been designed to place students in various internships where they become acquainted with real-life minority situations, to offer field-trips to get experiences directly from the field, and to introduce students to an active research culture in a supportive framework.

Eligibility: Full credit acknowledgement: Bachelor degree in social studies/sociology/social work/political science/cultural anthropology. Advanced English language knowledge. In case of other bachelor degree: individual consideration.

Invitation for three PhD Fellows in 2013

Institution/Organiser: SASS

Kind of support/work: job and study

Number of vacancies: 3

Duration: up to 3.5 years from 1st December 2013. During this time the candidate must graduate in PhD programme Sociology at SASS.

Site: Nova Gorica, Slovenia

Topics: SASS is searching for three candidates (Male or Female) each for a different research field: 1. Cultural Sciences (supervisor prof. Nikolai Genov; nikolai.genov@fuds.si). Research will be particularly focused to: value-normative universalization as a global trend and the key factor of cultural integration of societies; emergence of a value-normative system shared by all developed societies, thus implying the development of common cultural patterns of the global society; the idea of universal human rights and the idea of sustainable development as two pillars of value-normative universalization; ideas and practices of individual human rights belonging to a particular clan, tribe or society, and the diversity of economic, political and social rights; ideas and practices of sustained development – not only in environmental but also in economic, political and cultural terms; internal contradictions of the universalization of value-normative systems because of traditional and new value-normative particularisms; tensions between the trend of value-normative universalization and other global trends. 2. Political Science (supervisor Matej Makarovič, Associate Professor; matej.makarovic@fuds.si). The PhD fellow will be focused primarily to the field of political science and political sociology. Special attention may be devoted to the concepts of high complexity in a functionally differentiated modern society; contextual intervention and systemic discourse; multi-level governance related to the processes of globalisation and glocalisation; the changing role of the nation state; connections of political globalisation to economic and cultural globalisation; challenges to representative democracy and the forms of civic participation. The theoretical framework will be closely connected to empirical research, which will require the ability to combine both advanced statistical data analyses and qualitative research methods. 3. Sociology (supervisor Borut Rončević, Associate Professor; borut.roncevic@fuds.si). The PhD fellow will work on development on social research methods, with a special focus on - but not exclusively - computer assisted qualitative research methods and further development of mixed-methods research, especially fuzzy-set research method. His/her work will, however, not only focus on methods, but will be engaged in theoretically-informed research on relevant phenomena, either regional systems of innovation or complex networks in a dynamic environment.
